REWARD OF FAITHFUL

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR NEXT WEEK BY DR. GILBERT.

The Lesson Pertains to One of the Parables Delivered by Jesus in the Temple on Tuesday of the Passion Week.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for May 15.—Watchfuiness (Matt. xxiv:42-51) By J. E. Gilbert, D. D., LL. D., secretary of American Society of Religious Education. Introduction.

CONTEXT-Our lesson pertained to one of the parables delivered by Jesus in the temple on Tuesday of the Passion week. Following that he had an encounter with the Pharisees and Herodians, who sought to entangle Him in teaching. Then came a lawyer who questioned Him concerning he great commandment. After that Jesus turned on those about Him with the questurned on those about Him with the question, "What think ye of Christ?" Then, turning to the people, He warned them against the Scribes and Pharisees, and pronounced woes against them (Matt., xxii::39). Sitting near the treasury, He commended the widow's gift. Certain Greeks, introduced by the mpostles, had an interview with Him. Reflecting upon the unbelief of the Jews, He uttered a sad soilloquy. At the close of this busy day He left the temple never to return to it, and predicted its destruction (Mark. xiii: 1-2). That prediction was the occasion of an extended discourse to the disciples, of which our lesson is a part, delivered later in the evening on the Mount of Olives.

DEBATE. Expositors differ concerning the scope of the Savior's thought in that discourse. Bome contend that He had in mind zome far distant event, one that has not yet transpired, when He would come again in person (Acts iii) to judge the race of men (Rev. xx:12) and to close up the history of this globe, as the theater of man's probation (il. Peter ili:7). This they infer from the question of the apostles (Matt. xxiv:2) who desired to know about three matters, one of them "the end of the world." It is more probable that in this chapter Jesus referred to a series of events then near at ..and begun at Pentecost and completed when Jerusalem was destroyed by the Romans under Titus in the year 79 A. D. That was certainly the intent of His first remark (verse 2). The apostles doubtless alluded to three nearly contemporaneous circumstances, meaning by the end of the world the close of the age or dispensation. Several considerations support this view. Jesus was speaking of something that concerned those who heard Him. He warned them against deception (verse 2), ordered them to watch (verse 2).

Jene of the world the close of the age or dispensation. Several considerations support this view. Jesus was speaking of that the events belonged to that generation (verse 34). Such words would have no meaning if they referred to after centuries. The other tion, "What think ye of Christ?" Then, turning to the people, He warned them in the divine councils, predicted by the prophets (Dan. 1x.27; Matt. xxiv:15), and now publicly announced (verse 2); as Jesus was now about to remove His bodily presence and shortly come again in greater glory (Matt. xxiv:20); as His coming and the destruction of the Jewish policy would terminate the age and usher in a new dispensation, and as the apostles had been see apart to be the ministers and representatives of Jesus, to lay the foundations of the new era, therefore they are called to watchfulness. That word covered all the duties of a servant, namely, careful attention to all the interests and wishes of His master (Mark xiii:23). This faithfulness as servants (Rom. 1:1) Jesus enjoined upon the apostles in our lesson in four ways: 1. They were ignorant (verse 42) of the time appointed for the change. 2. They should be incited by the example of worldly servants (verses 43 and 44) when trusted. 3. Their faithfulness (verses 45 to 47) would be rewarded. 4. Their unfaithfulness would be severely punished (verses 45 to 51).

unknown to any man, to the angels or to the Son; but known to the Father only.
This indicates a profound secret. It is not surprising that men were ignorant, or that even the ministering spirits (Heb. i.14) should be uninformed but that this matter should be kept from Jesus during His humiliation, locked up in the chambers of the infinite mind, is cause for reverent wonder (Deut. xxix.29). It was something which the apostles might not inquire into (Acts i.17), which was a perpetual mystery in the church (I Thes. v.1). But why is this a reason for faithfulness? It invests every moment of intervening time with peculiar and earnest concern. There can be no lack of vigilance, no careless performance, no idleness or indifference.
They must be always in their places, always diligent, always faithful. They must not be time-servers anxious to be found true at the end, for they do not know when the end will come, but dismissing all reference to that they must be and do, with absolute and unwavering loyalty to their Lord.

EXAMPLE. To enforce this thought Jesus reminds the disciples of faithful service in secular affairs (verse 43). Suppose one has been placed in care of a house; suppose he knows precisely when a thief will come: then, as a true, good man, he will be awake, and he will not suffer the house to be broken up. That is one style of faithfulness. Had the disciples learned ghat they deaired, they might have acted accordingly. But Jesus desired them to lise to a higher plane. His coming would be in many respects like the coming of a hief (Rev. iii.20), and they would not know the time. They must therefore render a service superior to that given in secular life: not watchful for a specific event occurring at a definite time, but for any event, or circumstance, or need, occurring at any time. Or, to state it differently, if worldly servants are true to a human master, when all is known, how much more ought the apostles to be true to the Divine Master. when all is unknown (Ezek, iii.11). Stand at your p ready (I. Thess. v-6) to do for God what he man will do under purely earthly motives.

REWARD. Jesus knew man, and He knew that such unquestioned and complete surrender could not be expected without some inducement. These men had proved that they expected a reward (Matt. xix:25), and He himself had not been judiferent to the outcome of His lifework. (Heb. xii:2). And so He proceeds to set before them the blessed consequences of their fidelity, using an Oriental figure for the purpose. He likens them to stewards, who, in the East, are instructed in all things, furnishing food for the household. In the same relation the aposites were expected to stand (I. Cor. 1v:2) as were those who came after them (Acts xx:28). Such stewards would be intrusted with the full control or government of the house (verse 40). This thought Jesus had previously expressed (Luke xii:49). Now He desires the aposites to know that by their faithfulness they will be honored with the most exalted position in the new era (Luke xiii:29), becoming the heads of the new Israel (Matt. xix:25). Their rewards will be similar to that earned by Moses, the founder of the Jesus state (Heb. iii:50). This promised reward was not likely to produce any mercenary spirit, but to offer what a sanctified heart may properly desire (Psalm xc:17).

WARNING. But what if these men should disregard the Master's promise and prove untrue to His service. There was greater danger of such a result. The day of their sore trial was not far distant, when He would be removed from them such infiellty He gives warning. Continuing the same figure of service used under the last section, He shows the fate of an unfaithful servant. Supposing what was after all, their chief danger, they should forget their places as servants and assume to be lords, against which He had previously cautioned them (Matt. xxii:10), and then they should attempt to control their fellow servants (verse 49) and fall into dissource the firm of the fi REWARD. Jesus knew man, and He servant's part is to be found ever watch-ful in the Masier's cause, that no oppor-tunity be lost, no mistake made, no injury done. But if any neglect so to do, and turn aside to other pursunts, abusing their office. He will come and cast them aside as unworthy and unprofitable (Matt. xxv:30). Those who observe the Master's words and do His will shall be accepted, honored and blessed. Who shall portray the estate of a faithful minister of Jesus Christ? Part of His reward is here (Matt. xix:29), but most of it in the world to come (Matt. xxv:34; H. Tim. iv:8).
